Justice—and Wages

There is bound to be a good deal of discussion of the demands that have been made upon the railroads. Here are some points:

On a railroad labor unions have demanded wage increases of 11 per cent. In the case of the Illinois Central, these wage increases mean added costs of approximately $23,500,000 a year. Such demands are naturally of interest to everybody—to those who road and foot the bill, to those who work for it, to those who pay for it, and to those who receive the money in it.

the wage increase demands are so tremendous they bear 6to rather than have been earned or that can be supported.

tion, either this new rate should be paid to the stockholders and be never likely to be such profits in the business. Illinois Central has fortunately been able to keep up all interest-bearing obligations. However, the stockholders anything for the last ten years—since 1931. increased pay should make it necessary to increase freight rates, that would certainly lead to further increases in prices, and we all want to avoid. It should be unnecessary to say that labor is worthy of the pay of those whose labor runs the railroads must be
